Re: Mr Smith's Charity Walk - Update

Further to Tuesday's letter, I am writing to provide you with the latest update on Mr Smith's charity walk. Please find the details below:

Day Three:

Mr Smith woke up after spending the night in a bunkhouse with about a dozen people. He mentioned that a full belly, warm clothes, and a good night's sleep had lifted his spirits significantly.

This day was filled with sensory experiences as he walked along the path. He could hear the gentle lapping of the waves from Loch Lomond on his left, the distant tat-tat-tat sound of a woodpecker in the trees on his right, and the soothing sound of streams trickling down around his feet. Additionally, he noticed the path was adorned with wild primroses, blooming before the trees had even started to bud.

Can you spot five other walkers on the path?

In the evening, Mr Smith set up his tent at a campsite and had a near-disastrous incident with a fire. He had accidentally overfilled the meth burner, causing the flames to shoot up. Thankfully, he managed to extinguish the fire and learned a valuable lesson for future reference.

Day Four:

Mr Smith faced another challenging day. He had to stop 5 miles short of his destination due to excessive aches and pains. As a result, he booked himself into a camping pod for the night to rest. Tomorrow, he is scheduled to walk 20 miles on top of the hills, but he is uncertain about his ability to continue. He mentioned the possibility of taking the bus instead, as the thought of walking further seems daunting given his current condition. Mr Smith inquired about getting a taxi, but the campsite manager informed him that there are only three taxis available within a 50-mile radius, and the cost of getting one to the location would be quite expensive. Therefore, the bus appears to be the more feasible option.

Can you spot any frogspawn in this puddle? It was half way up a hill in the middle of nowhere.

We would like to take this opportunity to remind you that it is not too late to sponsor Mr Smith's walk if you wish to contribute to this worthy cause.
